

The Planner's Portrait

Sample buyers: Robert and Ellen Marsh, four acres inherited outside Spotsylvania | Fredericksburg division | Timeline: six to twelve months

Painted in the open countryside near Fredericksburg

Robert and Ellen, you read the fine print twice. Good. So do we, and this portrait was painted the way you make decisions: every step visible before you take one.

So read the house the same way. It is a weekday in early fall, four acres of Spotsylvania quiet that the I 95 corridor keeps trying to reach and cannot. Ellen is in the office by seven thirty, the one with the door that actually closes, because the plan put it on the front of the house where the light is even and the noise is not. Robert has the kitchen. The island is where the mail gets sorted and the budget gets reviewed on the first of the month, and the pantry is deep enough that the warehouse run finally has a home.

The first floor primary is on the back side, away from the driveway and the garage door, with a window on the tree line your father planted. Upstairs stays quiet until the holidays, when two bedrooms and a full bath earn their keep and the grandchildren discover that a house on four acres has room to run that a cul de sac never did. There is a mudroom between the garage and the kitchen because you asked for one, and a laundry room on the same floor as the bedroom because you noticed the plans that did not have one.

Every one of those decisions gets made in daylight, on paper, before the first shovel. Before you sign anything, you will hold the Homebuyer Roadmap with every stage named, every cost on the table, and every selection made with your consultant beside you. The plan is the product, and you will see all of it first.

You stay in control. We make the path predictable.
